

To Healthseekers

HERE IS NO TIME of the year in which the seeker after health need hesitate to come to New Mexico, for the high altitude, which averages more than 5,000 feet above the sea level, insures a dry, invigorating climate at all seasons which acts as a restorative tonic in its effects upon the most delicate constitution. In cases of heart troubles the high altitude is not always beneficial, but for those afflicted with throat or lung diseases there is no better climate on earth than right here in New Mexico.

Although there is some snow in the lower valleys during winter, and considerable of it in the high mountain ranges, which gives a crisp tang to the air during the cold months, the percentage of sunshine in this state averages a little more than 76 of the possible amount, and there are but few days in the year that are so inclement as to prevent outdoor exercise in the fresh, pure air. The absence of humidity insures comfort even at a very low, or a very high temperature.

In the summer and fall the seasons are incomparably delightful. There are light thunder showers during the summer months that tend to keep the air purified and the dust laid, and the nights are always cool and restful. Sleeping out of doors is the custom among healthseekers, at all times of the year. All of the sanatoriums throughout the state are provided with sleeping porches for this purpose, and only the most sensitive patients repair to the indoor apartments even during the very cold weather. In the summer and fall camping trips are extremely delightful and helpful to the invalid.

But it is well to remember that it is not advisable for healthseekers to come to this state without sufficient funds to meet all their necessary living expenses, as the opportunities for invalids obtaining employment are not encouraging.

Also, before making the trip in search of health, it would be well to communicate with some one in the particular locality to which you wish to go, and ascertain all necessary details pertaining to the place, in order that you might know just how to prepare for the changed conditions. This is, practically, a new country in many respects, and modern conveniences are not always available, and to some invalids this would mean a serious handicap.

There are quite a number of natural mineral springs in this state, the waters of which possess marvelous medicinal properties, and which have been known to effect some very wonderful cures. When these healing waters of New Mexico become more accessible and more generally known, they will rival the celebrated baths of Europe. As yet, however, the accommodations at most of these springs are somewhat primitive, and if one desires to take advantage of the curative qualities of the waters he must not expect modern conveniences, but be prepared to accept conditions as he finds them.

But there are many fine sanatoriums throughout the state that afford first-class accommodations to patients, if one is seeking health along less rugged routes. And if one is disposed to combine business with health-seeking, there are inviting opportunities for investment in public lands and industrial enterprises that would afford a comfortable living if properly managed. Many semi-invalids have taken up some special branch of farming, such as poultry, fruit or hog raising, and made a success of it, while the outdoor life restored the impaired health.

When to Visit New Mexico

When your lungs grow weak and your heart beats slow—

It's then you should visit New Mexico.

It matters not what time of year,

You'll find a tonic awaiting here.

It's in the air, the earth and sky—

In snow-capped mountains looming high;

It's found in pine and cedar trees,

And borne on every passing breeze.

When winter cold and ice abound

The tonic's in the snow-clad ground—

For germs of sickness seldom thrive

Where old Jack Frost is much alive.

If in the springtime you should come,

With aching heart at leaving home—

Our leafy woods and sunny skies

Soon banish tear-drops from your eyes.

While lilacs, in their purple dress,

Will bid you "health and happiness."

And both be yours, if here you stay

To greet their coming day by day,

In open plains or mountain glen,

Far from the feverish haunts of men.

For lungs grow strong, and hearts beat sure,

In this balmy air, so dry and pure.

Come when you will, summer or fall,

Health is awaiting each and all.

And is yours for the seeking, don't be slow,

But come at once to New Mexico.

How the Wilson Administration Has Penalized Patriotism

"Having in view the possibility of further aggression upon the territory of the United States from Mexico and the necessity for the proper protection of that frontier," President Wilson, on June 18, called out the mobile arms of the National Guard for federal service.

He did not call them out at their existing peace strength, but at war strength, which is practically double. Lacking a system of reserves, the National Guard organizations immediately had to start a campaign of recruiting to bring about the desired increase in their numbers.

Patriotic young citizens, under the urge of the cry, "Your country needs you," volunteered for service in gratifying numbers. According to Senator Chamberlain, chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, the result is that about 125,000 citizen soldiers have been mustered into the federal service and are now on the Mexican border or in camp in their home states. There may be more, but the administration refuses to make known the exact figures.

The movement is costing the public treasury many millions of dollars; it is costing the individual citizen soldiers many millions more. They went to the front believing the cry, "Your country needs you," for war service. They sacrificed advancement in their civil occupations, severed home ties, suffered, in thousands of instances, great financial loss. The less patriotic, who did not believe the cry of self-sacrifice, declined to make sacrifices, "at home on these losses."

The real purpose of the call are slowly developing. They are two in number.

First, a patrol of the border to do the work which President Wilson's friend, Carranza, finds it impossible to do. Because the recognized government in Mexico is too inefficient to keep its own citizens in check and prevent them murdering Americans on American soil, the American government undertakes the costly task of doing that work for them. The member of American citizens on Mexican soil is another matter. Carranza may go as far as he likes in that direction.

Second, a purpose of the mobilization on the border and in the camps is to train citizens to perform effective military service. The regular military establishment of the nation is manifestly too small for the actual military needs. To this extent the cry, "Your country needs you," was correct.

But these facts were not made clear when the call was issued. The idea was promulgated that men were needed for actual war service; not for military training. Deceit was practiced.

Opposing in the open legislation for universal military service, the administration by its acts has established what in essence is a system of compulsory military service. It is a system all the more vicious because it operates only against the patriotic, whereas a legalized universal training system equalizes the burden of military service among all men and all classes of men.

When, in 1914, Europe plunged into the greatest war of all history, and conditions in Mexico grew intolerable, intelligent men realized the fact that it was incumbent on this nation to build up its regular army and put its other military resources in condition for use. National safety demanded this. And yet, in December of that year, four months after the European war began, President Wilson went before Congress and declared that all agitation for military preparedness was hypocritical; that we were adequately prepared.

After a while the administration changed its mind and professed to believe in the necessity for preparedness. First came an enactment to increase the regular army by 20,000. But the odds of the country, and even all parts of the Democratic administration, could not change front so quickly as the head. Recruiting for the regular army lagged. Not yet have the 20,000 been secured.

The need pressed. A new national defense act, providing for still more men in the regular army, was enacted. But still the men were not forthcoming.

Suddenly and without warning the administration issued its call for mobilization of the citizen soldiers. It seemed still obsessed with the Bryan notion that an army could be created by presidential ukase.

When the call went out the government did not own enough uniforms, shoes, socks, blankets, hats, wagons, trucks, horses, mules and other things essential to equip the men called; it had made no provision for transporting the troops called to the points where they were required.

Who suffered most by this amazing lack of foresight, this leaping before looking?

Only the 125,000 patriots who believed that their country needed them for national defense; only the men who are making the great sacrifices.

The whole disgraceful story may be summed up in the phrase, the administration has penalized patriotism.

True, it is accumulating, by subterfuge, a reserve of trained soldiers, but events have demonstrated that it is "wolf" when there was no wolf. Should it be forced to cry "wolf" again, when the wolf is at the door, what will be the result?

Paris Theatre This Week

Wednesday August 16-- William Farnum Star.

William Farnum outshines all previous efforts in his fighting scenes in "Fighting Blood." He plays the part of Lem Hardy, the youngest of a family of fighters, who have gained reputations for courage on the battlefield and on the game of life. In the picture, Hardy becomes a clergyman. His church is invaded by a gang of toughs, former acquaintances. Hardy quells his desire to fight, but at last gets loose and throws the toughs into the street.

Barney Oldfield, automobile racer; Jess Willard, heavyweight champion, and Frank Chance, one-time famous first-baseman, witnessed all of the scenes. Each is enthusiastic over Farnum as a specimen of fine physical manhood.
